[Vanessa loves Mark]

I no longer resented Vanessa for her little infidelities.
I love her.

She's a damaged child, trying to make sense of the world.
I'm doing my best to help her.
I am naturally bound to be fully tolerant and comprehensive.

I guessed that for years she had been detaching herself from the real world, and in her mind rode a ghost train through a fairground she had built herself.

She was engaging with the enemy - not the Eurasia movement but the cultural prisons in which they languished.

These people want to change the world, plotting if they need to, but they've never had a central heating turned off in their lives.
A revolution against parking meters, speed bumps?

A lot of responsible people pretending to be hooligans.
No one took it seriously for a second.
These people are amateurs, they haven't a clue what they're doing.

The Eurasia super state could exist only in the deliriums of those Russian politicians overdosing on cocaine and vodka who pay Mark Savin's bills.
